A Constituent's Guide to the Albany Common Council: How does budget season work?*

Each month, we'll go back to basics on all things Common Council.

Budget season is upon us. In fact, it never quite left: you are always welcome to approach your councilmember with ideas on how to prioritize funding in your ward and across the City. But with the beginning of October comes the official introduction of the City's budget for the upcoming fiscal year, and with it, the official start of the budget process. So says the City Charter, which outlines the entire process from start to finish.

On October 1, Mayor Sheehan presented the first draft of the City of Albany's 2025 Budget. At its October 7 Regular Meeting, the Common Council introduced Ordinance 28.101.24, which can be found here. This ordinance is the Council's means of considering the budget, and from here, it's the Council's responsibility to either accept the budget as proposed or amend it based on department needs and constituent priorities.

The Council dedicates most of its October meetings to hearing from each City department. Departments present on their budget needs and wants, and it's up to the Council to weigh these asks against one another and against input from constituents. On October 21, the Council will hold its first public hearing on the proposed budget. Following the hearing and additional Finance, Assessment and Taxation Committee meetings, the Council must either adopt or amend the budget. It has until November 30 to send its decision—including a list of all amendments and their related explanations—back to the Mayor for approval.

From here, the process quickens. The Mayor has until December 10 to adopt the budget as amended or veto any of the proposed amendments. If the Mayor vetoes any of the Council's amendments, the Council has until December 20 to override those vetoes. At this point, the budget is finalized, and the City's forecasted revenues and expenditures for 2024 are set.

You can find a detailed schedule of department presentations, public hearings and potential votes here. If you are interested in learning about or speaking on an area of city government that matters to you, there's no better time to get involved.
