A Constituent's Guide to the Albany Common Council, Part 8: Voting Rules

Each month, we'll go back to basics on all things Common Council.

If your idea becomes a law, earns a spot on the agenda, and makes it through the committee process, you might be ready to bring it to a vote. But a vote is not a vote is not a vote: The Council's votes are subject to different rules depending on the legislation in question. New York's Municipal Home Rule Law, the City Charter, and Article 5 of the Common Council's Rules of Procedure outline what it takes to pass different types of legislation.

The general rule is this: To pass a local law, ordinance, or resolution, a majority of the entire Council—eight members—must vote in favor of it. But the rules are different for legislation that authorizes the City to take on bond debt. These bills—usually bond ordinances that come out of the City's end-of-year budget process—require the support of two-thirds of the entire Council; 10 members must vote “yes” for bonding legislation to pass.

The same is true when it comes to overriding mayoral vetoes. At least 10 councilmembers must vote to override vetoed legislation to move it past the Council again. That number increases to 11 for vetoed bonding legislation.

A separate set of rules come into play when the Council is considering legislation that has yet to age properly (more on aging next month). If a newly introduced or amended local law is pressing enough to include a message of necessity from the Mayor, a 10-member majority of the Council can vote to pass the law. If an ordinance is being considered at the meeting of its introduction, every councilmember in attendance must vote in favor of its passage.

For final vote tallies and more detailed recaps of the Council's business, you can read meeting minutes in the Agenda Center. (Please note that Regular Meeting minutes are located within each meeting's agenda page, which can be found by clicking the linked information under the meeting date.)
