A Constituent's Guide to the Albany Common Council, Part 7: Takin' Care of Business

Each month, we'll go back to basics on all things Common Council.

Every Regular Meeting of the Common Council follows the order of business laid out in the Council's Rules of Procedure. Article 2, Section 2.4 details these guidelines: Each meeting starts with a roll call of members present, a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance, and a moment of silence. If a public hearing is scheduled for the meeting, it comes next, and so on until the Council has dispensed with miscellaneous business and called for adjournment.

So say the rules, but in practice, this order is more flexible. Often, no legislation is scheduled for a public hearing. Sometimes, there are no new local laws ready for introduction and no held local laws ready for consideration. And it's rare for the Council to consider official petitions. The Council can skip entire sections of the agenda depending on the business before it.

At other times, it's appropriate to formally modify the order of business. Councilmembers can move to take items out of order, add items to the agenda, and lengthen public comment periods. Any motion that modifies the order of business requires "the consent of a majority present," which usually looks like a voice vote upon the question. (Extending public comment period, which is initially limited to a pair of 30-minute sessions split between the beginning and end of the meeting, is the most common of these modifications. For more on public comment period, see Section 2.5.)

You can find all meeting documents relevant to the order of business in the Council's Agenda Center. Please note that all documents are filed by the year of their associated meetings; to find agendas from previous years' meetings, you'll need to select the year of the meeting next to the "Common Council Caucus & Regular Meeting" or committee header.
